there's something about re-purposing industrial items into functioning, domestic pieces that i've always loved. for example, taking an old zinc bucket and making it into a light is brilliant. i will fess up that i pretty much loved every single item in south of market. but what really stopped me in my tracks was kay's unerring use of scale. each piece seemed just this side of oversized so as to give even the simplest cement planter or glass beaker a heroic sensibility. south of market is covet central.

covet:

silver cart table
zinc bucket light
raki pottery
brown botanical illustrations
chester sofa
a.s.a. salt & pepper grinder
great books
