t: it is approximated that the human nose has one thousand different sensors. our primitive sense of smell can more strongly trigger memory than any other sense. this is probably why, upon entering this lovely scent-filled maison, i was transported to my past life as a corseted, apple-cheeked aristocrat perched at a louis the fourteenth vanity in provence, spotting drops of rosewater behind my ears. lovingly established in 1931, hové is a family-run parfumerie that has been helping new orleanians smell like royalty for four generations.
