anna: now that you can get a big mac across from the pantheon in rome or shop at the gap in paris, foreign cities have lost a bit of their, well, foreignness. it's the pharmacies and odd shops i like to explore when traveling—places where you can still find unusual items. which brings us to kiosk. alisa locates the coolest items from around the globe and offers everyday necessities from whatever country is being featured monthly. so you may find something here as common as a bobby pin, but when that pin is from mexico and has a story behind it, it's got the air of something exotic.
